Dr. Caplan’s documentary will take us on her journey to bridge what has been called an “epidemic of disconnection” between civilians and Veterans. After the film, Dr. Caplan will host a 15-minute Q&A session and then an hour long workshop on: What Veterans want and how community members can learn to listen to their stories, participate in their various struggles and gain a deeper awareness of the meaning of war, the realities of military life and how it is to return home.

Dr. Paula J. Caplan is a clinical and research psychologist, an author and playwright. Her book, ‘When Johnny and Jane Come Marching Home: How All of us Can help Veterans,’ won three national awards for nonfiction. She has taught and lectured at Harvard University and the University of Toronto, and was a Fellow at the, Women and Public Policy Program at the Kennedy School of Government. She currently serves as an Associate at the Dubois Institute at Harvard University.
